

JOHN QUILL

The 1940
JOHN QUILL

PRESENTED BY SENIORS OF
JOHN MARSHALL
HIGH SCHOOL
ROCHESTER, NEW YORK

FOREWORD

Twenty-five years have brought great change in John Marshall High School. The John Quill has endeavored to present, in visual as well as a verbal perspective, a picture of the school which has evolved.

FIRST ROW, Left to Right: Miss Florence Chittenden, Miss Isabel Mayo, Mrs. Ida Flanders, Miss Eulalie Richardson

DEDICATION

To seven faculty members, Miss Richardson, Mrs. Flanders, Miss Chittenden, Miss Mayo, Mr. Snyder, Mr. Kircher, and Mr. Burt, we dedicate our senior annual. Since Kodak High School days, their faithful services and their many endeavors have done much to make our school an accredited institution of learning.

"HELD IN HIGHEST HONOR"

As we leave this school and embark on that somewhat vague adventure called life, we shall leave behind us a debt which will never be paid. It is that debt which we, a grateful class, leave unpaid as past and future graduating classes must do. They, like us, realized and will realize that although we have had wonderful opportunities offered to us in the form of equipment and a fine building that this would be for naught were it not for the faculty members who have instructed us through our somewhat critical years of high school adventures.

To them we owe the hours of patience spent in teaching us our various subjects and in the extra time they gave helping those of us who were having difficulty. We thank them for a deeper and more human understanding of our daily relations with other people. Their ready humor and companionship has been a source of pleasure and profit for all of us.

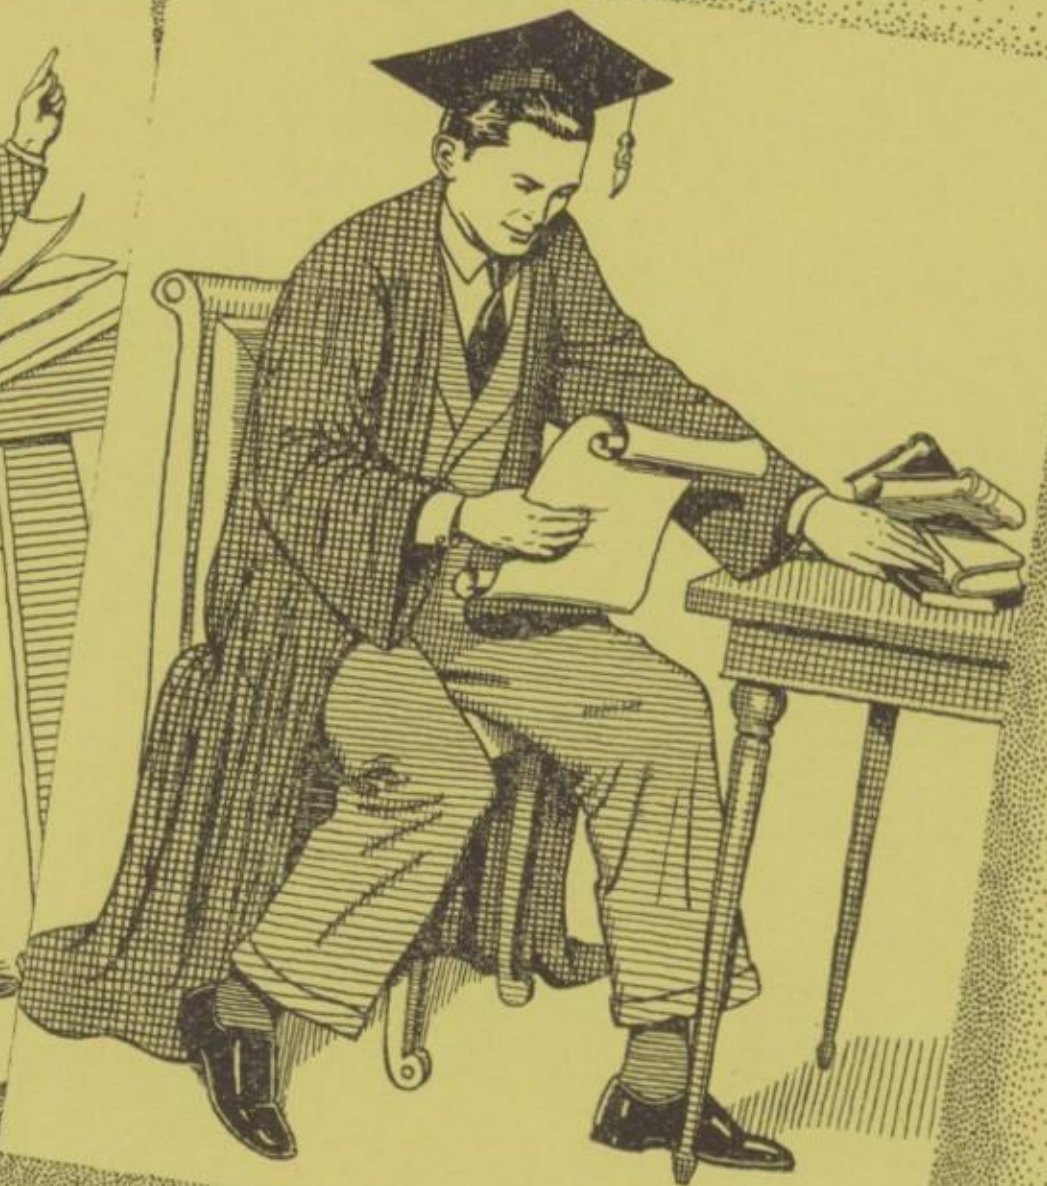

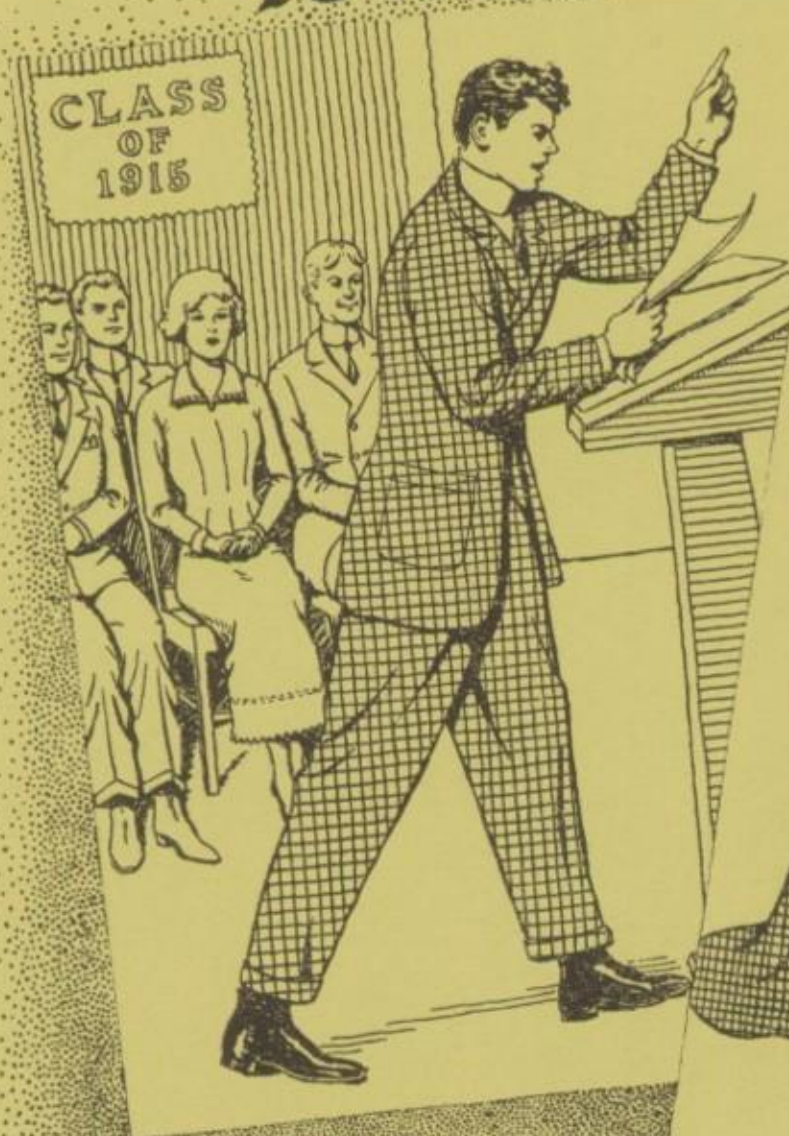

In addition to their regular duties, they have graciously participated in many of our student functions. After we finish this school work of ours, we shall go out in life; and as we meet each other and reminisce about our experiences in Marshall, one can be sure that the softening and enlightening experiences of a few years' absence will make us realize to an even greater extent the debt we owe to the faculty.

THIRD Row: Sheldon Smith, Pat Fillius, Helen Jean Thomas, Jeanne Grennon, Dorothy Strauch, Roberta Hyland, Betty Lou Skinner, Jean Banta, Bob Moore

Presiding over the student government for the first time in Marshall's history was the Executive Council. This body was provided for in a new constitution.

Perhaps the most successful of all the Council's achievements was the Christmas Dance. It was the first night dance for the students in two years.

The Council also has appointed several committees, including one to study lunchroom conditions, one to study traffic safety, the social committee, and the scholarship committee.

In order to be eligible as a member of the Council, or to hold a Student Association office, a pupil must have an average rating of 5.5. The Council consists of a certain number of boys and girls from each year instead of from each homeroom as the old constitution stated.

SECOND SEMESTER

The Junior House enables the eighth and ninth grades to have a larger share in student government. The House has its own members who plan activities such as dances, mixers, and special programs. They have their own set of officers and several representatives in the Council that help plan the affairs of the school.

This is the first year that the eighth and ninth graders have had an important say in the student affairs and it has been most successful. This system enables the students to be better prepared to take an active part in the senior student affairs.

The officers of the Junior House must attain the same rating as the officers of the senior executive group. If they do not, they lose their office and new officers are chosen.

"ALL FOR LOVE « « « and

"Will the class please come to order?"

"Is there anyone absent?"

"There will be a Students' Association assembly this morning and we shall have a speaker."

These are some of the questions and statements given by the homeroom presidents in the forty-eight homerooms of Marshall each morning. The presidents, elected each semester, brought the class to order in the morning and afternoon so that announcements from the public address system would be audible to all. Other duties included attendance taking, making announcements, and collecting money for gifts.

The person chosen for this position must have poise and a manner of presenting things which will command the attention of the class. The order maintained is necessary to the efficiency which a homeroom must have.

FIRST ROW, Left to Right: Robert Maurinus, Rebecca Marcus, Herb Winterroth, Mary Jane Little, Dudley Matthews, Barbara Ma
seth, Hugo Schreiber

Spain, Charles Brasser

NOTHING FOR REWARD''

Few appreciate the cooperation and the skill of the sales managers in uniting the school behind a worthy cause. This year they helped to set an all-time record of 97½% membership in the semi-annual Students' Association campaign. The rivalry among the managers was such that the sales manager of junior homeroom 311 obtained the membership fee several months in advance to be the first 100% room for the fourth consecutive term. The success of this campaign enabled the school to purchase an electric scoreboard for the basketball games and a new motion picture screen for the auditorium.

These sales managers helped to determine the success of the newly inaugurated high school football by selling 1,926 tickets to the three games. Through their efforts the Memorial Scholarship and the Christmas dances were successful.

Each year the sales managers receive a ticket to a night game free of charge and fifteen activity credits.

"WE PAINT YOUR WORLD"

Two thousand column inches, 25 installments of the Docket, and almost 1000 column inches of news for the outside daily and weekly papers have been prepared by the members of the Docket and publicity staffs. This last year some of the highlights included a blue-and-gold football issue, a red and green Christmas number, and an "Extra" announcing the election of Student Association officers.

After a consultation with Mr. Brady, school treasurer, it was decided that one picture could be allotted to each issue.

» » » EXACTLY AS IT GOES »

The John Quill staff of 1940 has endeavored to carry through the book the twenty-five year motif. It has tried through pages of fads, features, historical pictures and action shots to show the progress that John Marshall has made in a quarter of a century.

The staff has put forth every effort to make this yearbook one that will be enjoyed in the future as well as the present. Members of the John Quill staff wish to express their appreciation to the advisers for their suggestions and help which they have given toward the publication of this annual.

"SONGS PASS NOT AWAY"

John Marshall's senior choir has gained increasing popularity during the last few years. Already it has had several radio broadcasts and more are in prospect. The choir has provided a fine type of entertainment at musical assemblies. Memorable performances during the year included "The Lost Chord" by Sullivan and "Blue Danube" by Strauss.

Closely following in the footsteps of this organization is the junior choir, consisting of eighth and ninth graders. It gives training and experience for the senior choir. The first performance on Marshall's stage included "Sanctus" by Mozart, and "Ezekiel Saw the Wheel."

"MUSIC--LINGERS ON"

The class of 1940 has appreciated the music supplied by the band and orchestra this year. The members of the band adequately represented the school at the third football game of the season. The spirit at the basketball and soccer games was heightened when the familiar strains of Marshall's "pep" songs rang out above the din of the crowd.

The orchestra, in addition to the entrance and exit marches at every assembly, performed on the stage, featuring such numbers as "Mozart's Suite" and Joseph Haydn's "Symphonie Militaire."

OURS NOT TO REASON WHY

Hosts and hostesses of the lunchroom patrol donate their time to keep the lunch-room clean and orderly. The boys, with their jackets of the school colors, and the girls with smocks, lend a gay atmosphere to the lunch periods.

Through stormy weather and fine weather John Evans, captain of the outdoor patrol, and his squad of fifteen boys take care of the parking lot and guard the street crossings nearest the school. These boys can readily be recognized by their navy blue and orange jackets.

OURS IS TO SERVE OUR BEST

Hundreds of dollars worth of valuable equipment is entrusted to the care of visual service operators. Upon request, films and slides are shown to classes, thus enabling teachers to present subjects more clearly.

The assembly programs are made more impressive by the effective lighting handled by the stage crew. This year, besides the usual levers and buttons, the crew manipulated the new moving picture screen.

The radio crew consists of students who direct radio programs to the proper classes from the control room or other stations.

Superior Scribes

The Quill and Scroll, an international honor society for high school journalists, enlarged its membership this year to a total of 29. The primary purpose of this society is to recognize unusual journalistic achievement by school students.

New members are selected according to their journalistic achievements, scholastic ability, and character. Mr. Miller, acting as adviser, recommends new members to the Executive secretary in Chicago, Illinois. After their acceptance this year, they were formally initiated in an impressive ceremony before the student body. Each member is presented the honor society pin, and also receives Quill and Scroll magazine for one year.

Officers for 1939-1940 were: president, Thelma Harman; vice-president, Jessie Jones; and secretary-treasurer, Mary Jane Little.

Pleasure Planners

Dancing is one of the most important activities of the high school social program. In order to facilitate better management of these student functions, the Executive Council appointed a social committee in charge of after-school dances. This committee also assisted in the preparation for the Yuletide Prom.

Listed among the various obligations of the group are attending to checking and admission at dances. As added duty, the social committee acted as a welcoming committee for the faculty members who attend student dances, where teachers enjoy the fun as well as students.

Science Searchers

Although a comparatively new organization in John Marshall, the Science club is rapidly gaining in popularity. The club is interscholastic, with chapters in various schools.

Marshall's chapter has ten members, officers of which are: Doris Woehr, president; Ralph Denter, vice-president; and Katherine Ellington, secretary.

Booking Agents

"You have to buy five at a time."

"We can't sell just one."

These are some of the remarks made by the car token clerks during lunch period every Monday and Thursday.

Although the services of the two girls are not usually considered in the same category as other school activities, they do receive activity credit for their assistance to the school.

Student Samaritans

Practical experience in nursing is being acquired in a new club organized this year at Marshall — the Nightingale Club. Girls who wish to become nurses visit the various hospitals and assist in numerous way to get first-hand experience in their chosen profession.

The members of the new club are few at present, but it will undoubtedly increase in size as the club becomes known to more students. Mrs. McNall served as adviser.

Money Handlers

The motto, "A Penny Saved is a Penny Earned" is practiced throughout Marshall every Monday morning. A bank clerk, elected in each homeroom at the beginning of the term, takes care of the student bank books, and the money is deposited in an uptown bank. There is a special banking office in the main hall where the books and accounts are accurately kept by the banking manager and his assistants.

Robert Moore is bank manager and Mr. Epping is faculty adviser, Ruth Adsit and Richard Allen are tellers. The bank clerks are: Vada Coax, Jack Keegan, Marian Kaufman, Gloria Frachal, James Rasmussen, Laurence Embury, Howard Coster, Richard Wild, John Lanctot, Elvira Villa Reale, Gordon Davis, Arline Beechler, Eva Cangialosi, Phyllis Johnston, Gladys Dobles, Lois Harris, Betty Aab, Martha Havill, Roy Jensen, Delores Doell, Margaret Newton, Marilyn Heeder, Margaret Starks, Rose LaForce, John Yates, Francis Stoffe, Bert Graham, Jane Laurine, Jack Walker, Arthur Martin, Rita McCullough, Richard Foster, Jane Cristoff, Gladys Hastings, Ralph Lloyd, Ira Parker, Marjorie Doyle, Robert Reeves, Sada Rudin, Marian Allen, Anne Palermo, Robert Curtis, Donald Clement, Dorothea Graham, Concetta Cimino, Thomas Howard, Donald N. Curtiss, Marie Lawson, Shirley Freatmen.

Treasure Trustees

Have you lost your favorite fountain pen, your bracelet, or even your new gloves? Inquire at the Lost and Found department, room 114, in the main hall. Lost books, sweaters, and scarfs—everything is there. There is someone in this room all during the day, and before and after school.

Frequent auctions are held by this department. Unclaimed valuables are sold at about one tenth of their original value, and the proceeds are turned over to the Students' Association to be used to bring speakers to assemblies, to run student dances, and to finance other activities.

Store Keepers

Among the conveniences in Marshall is the book store, just around the corner in the main hall. Mr. DeLong and his pupil helpers have served there since the store started five years ago.

This year they provided interesting novelties such as Marshall megaphones and emblems. A stenographic kit, containing all the necessary supplies for a secretary, has been a boon to students taking the commercial course. Recently the store installed a show window facing the main hall to remind pupils to stock up on supplies.

Several clerks work in the book store before and after school. This work gives them practice in salesmanship and in handling customers.

Amanuenses All

Every department head and adviser in the school is assisted by a student secretary. Their work includes taking dictation, typewriting, running stencils and numerous other tasks. The practical experience which they receive is a great help to them in the future when they attain office positions.

COOPERSTOWN COMMEMORATORS

Spring 1939 was a banner year for Marshall's spirited baseball players. Besides winning the Interscholastic league championship, they also annexed the sectional crown by conquering Mt. Morris in the final game of the tournament. Mr. Clippinger, who took Mr. Ulrich's place as coach, did a splendid job of handling the team. Throughout the season the pitching and batting of Co-Captain Bob Keegan was a great asset in the league race. Bob gave his finest performance in the three sectional games, allowing the opposing team only ten hits, while he slashed out two home runs and a triple.

The selection of Carl Ciufo and Bob Keegan for the all-scholastic team brought the season to a climax. For his brilliant playing through the season, Bob Keegan was selected as the outstanding athlete in the Interscholastic league. This honor brought him a road trip with the Rochester Red Wings.

WINGED SANDALS FOR OUR FEET

Although they were fighting all the way, Dame Fortune did not smile upon the attempts of Marshall's track and cross country teammates last season.

Finishing near the bottom in league competition, the track squad took ninth place in the sectional meet. The cross country team also finished near the bottom of the heap. The squads were coached by Mr. Makin.

WE LEAD, WE GUIDE, WE GROW

One, two, three, four — Marshall's feminine leaders are going through their paces. The members of the Leaders' club, under the guidance of Miss Ruth VanDeWalle, drill in the techniques of gymnastics and games so that they can lead their classmates.

WE WEAVE IN MODERN SPORTS

Marshall's basketball team went through an in-and-out season this year, winning eight games and losing eight. Its players managed to gain a tie for fourth place with Charlotte in the Interscholastic league.

Kenneth Tarbox was captain of the quintet. "Red" Finlayson proved to be the standout member of the squad, ranking fourth in the league scoring race and gaining all-scholastic distinction.

In the league games Marshall won four out of five tilts.

WE STRIKE, WE SPARE, WE ?????

Because of the popularity of girls' bowling, an intraschool league was formed by the feminine enthusiasts this season for the first time. Under Mr. Swanson's guidance, fifty participants were formed into ten teams and reported at the Ridge Hall for weekly alley meetings.

WE LEARN TO PLAY » » »

The opening of the soccer season found Mr. Gerace faced with the task of building up a practically new varsity team. In the first game, led by Baybutt and Maher, Marshall defeated Jefferson 1-0 on a water-soaked field. The Orange and Blue next defeated Edison by the same score, 1-0. Marshall lost the next five games, ending with a total of two wins and five losses up to that point.

Coming back, however, the Marshall kickers subdued their oldest rivals, Charlotte, by the margin of one goal. The score was 2-1. The final game ended in a 1-1 tie with Washington. Marshall completed the season with three wins, five losses, and one tie.

Marshall's reserve team finished the season with two wins, two ties, and one loss.

QUIVERS, BOWS, AND ARROWS - . . .

Entering into the extra-curricular activities for the first time in Marshall's history, an archery club was formed last fall. The members met every Thursday, and made their archery equipment in the craft shops. Wilbur Waddington was president of the club while Mr. Goetz acted as supervisor.

« « IN LIFE'S LARGE GAME

The fall of 1938 found the Board of Education voting to return high school football. Last fall, after a thirty-year absence, it made its actual appearance. Two teams were formed, one on each side of the Genesee River. Franklin, Edison, Monroe, Washington, and East each contributed ten players to compose the East squad. Charlotte, Marshall, Jefferson, Madison, and West each had nine players and Vocational had five on the West side team.

Three games were played by the varsity at Red Wing Stadium. East won by the score 6-0 Armistice Day; 13-7 Friday night, November 17, and 15-0 Thanksgiving Day.

BREAST STROKES, DIVES, AND CRAWLS

Presenting a formidable array of swimmers, Marshall's 1939-40 squad swept all opposition before it with the exception of West and Monroe. The squad was sparked by the swiftness of Donald Woehr, co-holder of the sectional record for the fifty-yard free style event. Marshall was also well represented in the back stroke fancy diving and relay events. The team finished in third place for the second successive season.

WE BATTLE WITH ELUSIVE BIRDIES

Birdies flew as Marshall's girls showed their skill at playing badminton. This activity has become more and more popular with feminine athletes.

The club met on Friday afternoon directly after school in the girls' gym. The group was under the direction of Miss Ruth VanDeWalle.

BATHING, BEAUTIES, BUBBLES

Instruction in elementary strokes for beginners and a chance to improve swimming and diving for the more advanced swimmers are the advantages offered in the girl's swimming club. This club met every Wednesday and Friday under the direction of Mrs. Holcombe and Miss O'Connor.

KEGLER QUINTET

The bowling team met every Tuesday night at Buonomo's bowling hall. Robert Simmons was captain. Towards the end of the season the players on the squad each had a chance to prove their mettle in individual competition.

The approximate team averages for the team were:

Jack Liberman.....	156
Robert Simmons	154
Gordon Weller.....	148
Jack Norton	137
Edward Mix.....	130

CAGE QUINTETS

Striding along on the crest of the largest turnout in the history of Marshall, homeroom basketball loomed as the most popular sport this season. Mr. Epping and Mr. Booth were in charge of this activity. Games were played after school in the gyms. Each homeroom had at least one team which played other teams in its league. The eleventh and twelfth grades formed the "A" league. Tenth grade formed the "B" league and eighth and ninth grade made up the "C" league.

COURT BLACKSMITHS

Marshall's horseshoe team, under the direction of Mr. Ulrich, enjoyed one of its best seasons last year. Bob Richards, Allen Fields, Lloyd Cook, and William Smyth formed the contingent, which, playing on the Benjamin Franklin courts, finished the season in a tie for third place.

WRIGHT RACQUETTEERS

The Orange and Blue netmen finished third in interscholastic competition, ending a successful season in 1939. Jack Handy, star player of the team, became Marshall's champion.

The seeded players who competed in the tournament were John Williams, Jack Handy, Jack Spencer, and Ralph Cully.

The 1940 team has lost several of the players of last year's team. Mr. Wright, coach, will commence the season with one veteran. The remaining members of the team will be underclassmen.

The majority of the games were played on the Kodak Park Tennis courts. The winner of the consolation tournament was Richard Roloff.

VOICES OF EXPERIENCE

Marshall's coaches are largely responsible for the health and physical instruction of teams. By putting the boys through their paces, the mentors keep up spirit and morale. Aside from teaching the boys the fundamentals of the games, the instructors also advise them as to the proper food and required amount of sleep.

Mr. Ulrich, head of the physical education department, is assisted by Mr. Gerace, Mr. Makin, and a student teacher who is sent to Marshall every term. The student teacher stays for a period of nine weeks in order to study the technique of Marshall's teachers. He often takes over the instruction of classes and the coaching of reserve teams.

NATURE SEEKERS

Nature study enlivened the journeys of the girls' hiking club last fall. The hikers observed the progress of autumn in various parks visited during the course of their travels.

The club boasted twenty members, most of whom reported regularly every Monday afternoon. The group was under the supervision of Mrs. Doris Holcombe.

EGGSHELL TENNIS

Every Monday night the lunchroom was converted into a ping-pong recreational room. Under the direction of Miss O'Connor, this after-school organization was enthusiastically supported this year.

Through the efficient efforts of the managers, Edith Newell, Janice Stillman, Jean Chase, and Alice Culhane, this group gained considerable recognition.

SENIOR SOUVENIRS—Continued

November 22—Bud Davis and Terry Wetmore insist they could have won the battle of Bull Run. As "Henry" says: "Our red pork-pies would make any bull run."

November 23—Even a broken foot doesn't stop Bill Carter's jittering.

November 30—After Paul Stalbrodt told an officer of the law his junior license was for household duties, the cop looked into the car at seven beaming young men. Bob Dean croaked, "I'm household duty No. 7!"

December 1—Shame on you, "Zeke," for forgetting both your lines.

December 3—"Information Please." Howard Coster asked the referee of the traditional Charlotte-Marshall game what the players were trying to do. Referee Blumstrad spun around and said, "Dance!"

December 5—The big question in the school these days is, "Will our Christmas dance go over?"

December 11—Another student car in the parking station. It's named "Homespun" because Jack Grierson painted it himself.

December 18—In the words of Master of Ceremonies Terry Wetmore, our Christmas dance was so-swe-swe-terrifice. And what talent! Even the teachers enjoyed themselves.

December 21—Groans and thrills. Graduation pictures are coming back. The last one in the home-room to see them is the person to whom they belong.

December 31—New Year's Eve, and almost 1940. How Marshall did revel! "Bud" Hanes sitting on the middle of the floor of Collegiate Club, those seniors in the Manhattan doing bird-calls, "Gordie" McNaughton pouring water on Bud Baybutt because he was hot, Bill Dunn squirting water out of the carnation in his button-hole, Jayne Raysor getting her new clothes all splashed by a passing car—yes, they brought 1940 in!

January 5—Dan Donnolly told Mr. Kircher today that he was in seventh to do some voluntary work.

January 7—Marion Kaufman's gay new red hood perched pertly in a tree-top half way down the Ellison Park slide. Mr. Miller went sliding too.

January 11—Bob Strong accidentally hit Mr. Eike on the head with a paper wad. Diminutive Mr. Eike yelped, "Oh, my golly!"

January 15—What a rush for the back row in the group pictures now being taken!

January 18—"Pat" Dougherty and Norma Graef try their best to keep the orange line free from the students in the lunchroom even if it means a real football tackle by the "fighting Irish."

January 23—How do you wear your bow? George Washington, Betty Kirk, and Ethel Caird like theirs on the cue.

January 24—Exams are on—Had the afternoon off and listened to latest Glen Miller recordings.

January 30—"Mother" Jessie took two office girls, Betty Harman and Marilyn Kennedy, under her wing.

January 31—Donna Burns enjoyed a tempting lunch of crocheting needles and floss as the result of snatching the wrong bag when she left for school.

February 2—Home today. Boy, have I got a cold in my head! Matilda called to say Bob Richards is the new editor-in-chief of the Docket.

February 7—Overheard Paul Rush calling Kay Mangano "Two-Gun Casey" because of her bangle bracelet.

February 14—Swing hits Rochester! "Chuck" Langtry groaned, "It's the men who pay!" But there he was at the Policemen's Ball with Mary Wirley.

February 15—S'no school because of the snow, but the weather is great. What happened to the Board of Education?

February 17—Confucius Barry say, "No tickee—no votee—join now!"

February 22—Marshall's perfect specimens roast hots near Zoo on winter picnic.

February 23—Took my sandwiches and went to see "Went With the Breeze." What's Scarlet O'Hara got that I haven't?

February 28—Four hundred thirty-five votes carried "In Ernest" Crewdson into the presidency. "Landslide" Gibbin—cheerleader.

February 29—Jessie Jones took leap year to heart. She was seen on one knee before Andrew Neilly.

January 28—The last of the three Jeff glamour men left today. Marion Ball is taking it hard.

March 19—To future chemists—"The day of the rugged individualist is over?" Miss O'Reilley.

March 1—In like a mouse and out like a light—that's March and Marshallites with Max Bellis giving lessons on how to be a good secretary to Bette Vannell and Rita Jansen by having them sit, one on each knee.

April 1—Once a fool—always a fool. Why be a fool any longer—I'm quitting.

FINIS

The editors wish to make special mention of a radio script presented to the literary section by Jeanne Grennon. Its excellence made it wholly acceptable for publication, but its length, if included, would have substantially reduced the number of other pupils whose work could be presented.

MARSHALL MARCHES ON

1940, 1936, 1935, 1926, 1915 — the years turn back—Silver Anniversary! Dedication! First classes! The film factory, and last but perhaps most significant, our early beginning.

Twenty-five years ago an unusually large class was graduated from No. 41 school, which was then called Kodak school and was located in the town of Greece. Since several of the students wished to continue their education, Kodak High School was founded in September, 1915. In the corner of what is now the assembly of the grammar school, fifteen pupils gathered to study Latin, which was the subject offered by Miss Lindsay, the sole teacher of the institution. The school's athletic interest centered on basketball, with Spencerport as the chief rival.

Nineteen-eighteen was an important year in the progress of the school — the first play was presented; the Students' Association was organized; and the first year book was issued. Mr. Snyder, former mechanical drawing teacher, was advanced to the position of principal in 1921. In gaining the spirit of our predecessors, I quote from a former year-book: "As usual there was a tremendous amount of interest among the students and the team was well supported. We were always quick to see our own faults and to remedy them. Above all, Kodak stood for 'a clean game.'"

Eleven years rolled by, and in 1926 Kodak High School was dissolved to become Northwestern High School, that is for twenty-seven days, but on September 17, the Board of Education officially fixed the name as John Marshall High School in honor of the fourth chief justice of the United States. The site of the virtually-new school was located on Ridgeway Avenue, east of Dewey Avenue, in the former Powers Film Products Company factory. Its registration totaled 350 pupils and twenty teachers. On March 30, 1928, we have the first issue of the school paper, then called It and later Jo-Mar. Each year the enrollment increased. The wrestling hall became class rooms; and there developed portables with stoves, portables without stoves, and more portables — until at last, in 1934 a new building was needed.

Parting with the old factory ended many fond memories. It meant no more groaning pipes to mar teachers' lectures and furnish impromptu showers; no more creaking floors and hastily constructed partitions that fought losing battles with the heat of summer and the cold of winter. The four walls, however, plus inconveniences, did not make a school, for in the cramped rooms of the old John Marshall, a feeling of comradeship marked relations between pupils and faculty. The spirit was produced not only by the size of the structure, but also by sympathies that tend to bind fellow sufferers together. "All for one and one for all."

Another milestone in the history of the school was reached in 1935, when, after more than fifteen months of work, the present building was ready to open its doors to students and faculty. Eighth graders were, for the first time, among the entrants who reveled in the beauties of this palace of education. Finishing touches were added and the school was dedicated on April 26, 1936. Such luxuries as the swimming pool, bicycle room, and beautifully equipped instructional rooms were unknown to the pupils of the old Kodak High School, and to the students of the old factory. To these luxuries have been added an organ, an electric score board and a beaded screen. Bricks and mortar, however, never make a school; it is built by the spirit of the students and the attitude of all within its walls; the force which makes pupils cheer on their team; the happiness they feel as they watch the kindergarteners receive their gifts at Christmas time; the support they give to student dances; and the loyalty which the students show toward all school activities all demonstrate real esprit de corps.

From a factory to a palatial structure! Faces and footsteps all have changed; gone from our stately halls are those noble pioneers who blazed the trail. I can see them now, marching ever onward, carrying always in their hearts the banner of their Alma Mater.

ALICE MCKINNEY

THE EYES HAVE IT

It wasn't her soft, shining brown hair. Nor was it her magnetic, refined manner. No, it was the rare ability of her dark, brown eyes to reveal even the innermost feelings of her soul. Eyes whose gravitational force was so great that he was pulled from his appointed orbit to become her eternal satellite.

However, in a sense she was his satellite, for within those expressive eyes there was always, mingled among other lesser emotions, an ardent affection that arose from her keen pleasure in merely being with him.

Since she had first met him, fully one month before, her very existence had been founded on those precious minutes that she might spend with him motoring through the surrounding hills and valleys, iridescent in their fall splendor, taking long walks through the wood at twilight when the birds chirped their last goodnight to their mates, or simply relaxing before the fireplace at the close of a long day. It was during these moments that he beheld the gamut of emotions as expressed by those lovely eyes, for she could hold nothing from him; her eyes were like an open book.

Many times as they sat before the fire, he saw reflected in her eyes, as well as the dancing flames of the fire and her affection for him, an intense, almost Christlike faith in anything he might undertake.

Often he pondered as to what he might have done to inspire, yes, to deserve such incomparable trust and affection, but he could only conclude that it was simply her nature—she being a humble cocker spaniel.

THOUGHTS

*I stepped from the home of a friend
Into the magic of night.
The snow seemed to fall without end;
The wind seemed to whisper its plight*

*Quickly I began to walk onward,
But the power and beauty of the snow
Like a magnet held me spellbound
And refused to let me go.*

*It fell to the earth gently,
Soft as a cover of down.
It caressed all things softly,
And shimmered like a silver gown.*

*It drifted downward from heaven
To lie over all the world;
A blanket of gleaming diamonds,
A cover of lustrous pearls.*

*As it fell it seemed to comfort
The cares of the world away,
And left in its place a peacefulness
That did not pass away.*

RETURN OF THE SQUIRE

WITH APOLOGIES TO CHAUCER

*I brought a friend to school one day,
He was 'bout twenty years old, I'd say.
His long hair hung in kiddish curls;
His gown was short like a modern girl's.
From Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales" he came,
And he was called the Squire by name;
Upon our brick school, he looked with awe,
Astonished at the four stories he saw.
His gaze then fell on two maidens fair;
He was shocked to see their toes out for air.
Then faintly I heard a distant clanging—
It seemed to come nearer, this awful banging.
The Squire's knees began to quiver,
As down the street sped Spike and his flivver.
A screech, a sputter, and the engine was dead,
And out hopped Spike from his car so red.
My friend stood rooted; paralyzed with fear,
Dumbfoundedly staring at the "monster" so near.
I couldn't convince him to this minute,
That "that thing on wheels" had no devils in it.
Instead I ushered him thru the door,
And down the stairs to the basement floor.
Into the lunchroom we then went,
And two of my friends for food I sent.
He looked at the dinner I ordered, amazed,
And I thought perhaps he was still a bit dazed,
So I picked up a fork and started to eat,
Really relishing the delicious pig's meat.
He started to eat, too, but he didn't use a fork,
He just picked up the meat and swallowed the pork.
The grease dribbled from his hands, mouth and chin,
And I was embarrassed at his unmannerly sin.
I gave him one disgusted look,
And pushed him back in Chaucer's book.
There you'll find him on page four,
A lover and a lusty bachelor once more.
As for me, I definitely say, "No,
I would not have liked to live six centuries ago."*

WINTER STARS

*Sharp silver stars in a black velvet sky
Piercing the silent night—
A moon that is cut in a slim golden arc,
Dimming the stars with her light.*

*Thousands of years have they glimmered down thus,
Watching beginnings unfold—
Will they be shining a thousand years hence
Watching the world grow cold?*

*Still I stand, and humbly—
Know I face eternity.*

JANET GAY

UNANSWERABLE WONDERINGS

*When the stars with dimming light
End eternity,
Will, among all men, exist
Perfect harmony?*

*Will there be no bickerings—
Flickerings of wrath?
Will there be no weaker ones
Pushed from off the path?*

DEAR DIARY - - - -

TUESDAY

Dear Diary,

A few weeks ago I struck a fellow, accidentally, with my new blue convertible. He wasn't hurt very badly, not more than a few scratches, but he caused a frightful disturbance. I was dragged through two courts before the case was finally dismissed. I lost out, naturally, and Father had to pay the man an outrageous sum. It wasn't the money exactly, for we have plenty of that (thank Heavens), but it was the ghastly scandal that accompanied it. Winchell made the most of it, and my friends are perpetually kidding me.

Well, to get down to the point, this evening the man had the colossal nerve to call and ask me out to dinner. I was so astounded that before I realized it I had accepted. Now I don't know what to do. I can't very well break the engagement, for I don't know where he is staying. (Heaven only knows what kind of a place it is.) We will probably dine at "Sling's Spaghetti Joint" or some such place of degradation. Then what will my friends say?

All I can do now is hope.

WEDNESDAY, 5:00 P. M.

Diary,

Why must fate always wrap its insidious arms around me? What have I done to deserve THIS?

This man (or should I say primitive beast) with whom I am going out this evening is the direct cause of a sleepless night, during which time I concluded that he is nothing short of a mercenary, rapacious egotist who intends to get everything possible from Dad and me. I can't understand why I couldn't have been born a groundhog, who only sees this miserable earth once a year.

When I last saw this fellow, dear Diary, he carried a week's growth of beard. (He can certainly afford a razor now.) I imagine he is about twenty-eight although it is rather hard to tell, owing to the disguise. The only possible way I could recognize him now would be by his well-worn, shining suit and his peculiar shade of red hair.

He is coming in less than three hours. All I can do now is hope.

THURSDAY

Wonderful, Wonderful Diary,

Of love I sing!!

As Maria was helping me put on my oldest dress last night, he came. My heart was in my mouth, for I had secretly hoped that something dreadful would happen to him. I came downstairs a half hour later with a martyred expression and looking as though the cat had dragged me in from nowhere. Sitting in the library with Dad was a man, positively the best looking one I have ever seen, wearing tails. This couldn't be he, I thought, and he evidently thought that I was the scouring girl, for he made no signs of recognition. I did not enter the room, luckily, but asked the butler if he was the one. After he assented, I returned to my room and quickly changed.

We went to a lovely place for dinner. Somewhere out in the country. I couldn't understand how one person could change so in appearance and manners.

TO — JOHN MARSHALL

We do not boast of loyalty, nor speak
Of that unworded feeling that we share—
Sometimes we laugh and mimic, "Our dear school!"
But somehow, underneath, you know we care.

We'll work and play and lie and hope and dream,
Beneath the flaming Orange and the Blue—
And in us all, there cannot help but stir
A quiet pride and loyalty to you.

The sudden breath that catches when we see
Your towers, sharp against the vivid blue—
We cannot put it down in solid words;
We're only glad that—we belong to you.

This is a product you have built,
That stirs, shall stir wherever we may be,
And in return for all you offer us,
We pledge to you—unswerving loyalty.

God Made Little Brothers . . . Why?

Yes, God made little brothers. Why? . . . To struggle blindly under the ridiculous dictation of a war-crazed man, whose domination has been generally accomplished through the cooperation of the war-poor people of his adopted country? To spend unbelievably hideous weeks of hell on a battle front? . . . Firing and being fired on . . . killing and being killed . . . all for the sake of those ideals for which their homeland prays. Ideals at which the scoffing world laughs. Ideals which are nothing more than words, meaningless words, yet words which have put four nations of Europe on a Western Front. Ideals for which men, little brothers, are now sacrificing their lives—hopelessly, ruthlessly, and uselessly.

Did God make little brothers for this purpose? Were men made to fight? Cannot they experience errors and profit by them? Cannot men make goals which they can peacefully attain? Are men such fools that they cannot realize that worthwhile things are never obtained through battles? Cannot they understand that war today is not a war as Webster sees it, but heedless mechanized slaughter, in other words, deliberate MURDER!

Evidently not, for today we are experiencing the prelude to another world war. A war in which men are merely fingers on the hands of dictators. . . . A war in which ideals or codes of honor have no place. . . . Women and children receive little, if any, consideration. And for all the deference that the wounded obtain, they might just as well be dead!

No, I don't think God meant little brothers to spend a useless manhood in sanitariums, where the puppets of all dictators lie after the show is over; or to lie hopelessly maimed in the hospitals that all countries maintain for their living dead. No, I don't think God made little brothers for that, rather I like to think that God made men for the express purpose of working to help save other "little brothers"; for after all is not that the express purpose of life? Are not we here to help each neighbor, not to destroy him? "Little brothers" were made to love, honor, and obey the ideals for which their civilization is responsible, to help make this world a better place in which to live; a place where peace of mind grows with peace of peoples.

MILDRED CORLETT

Parting Is Such Sorrow

Cold, wet, and with a sobbing heart, he trudged in the general direction of his modest, unpretentious home. Even the moon seemed to share his misery.

It was all his fault, but he hadn't been able to resist that slowly swishing tail and those pleading eyes. About six hours before, twelve-year-old Tom Watkins finally consented and let King, his dog, accompany him on a trip into the neighboring woods.

The snow was nearly ten inches thick and the sun, shining on the white coverlet, was all but blinding. Setting out at as brisk a pace as possible, they reached the outskirts of the "jungle." Then lapsing into the land of old, every rabbit became a ferocious beast and every dark stump a lion or tiger.

After passing by these fearful "dangers," the pair came upon a pond in the center of the woods fed by many streams from the surrounding country. Due to the appealing sight of the glaze on the ice, the pals were soon sliding over its surface.

Spying the unfrozen point in the center, King made his way slowly toward it, intent upon a lap or two of the cold water. Realizing his pet's danger Tom yelled to him, but—too late! A cracking of ice, a splashing of King's body hitting the cold water, a yelp and a minute's silence told what happened. Beneath the ice a dark spot moved. It was King, trapped beneath the roof of ice.

Hysterical with fear and anguish, Tom tried coaxing the animal toward the spot from whence he had entered, not realizing he himself was nearing the fatal hole.

A second splash. A few seconds later Tom, sputtering and coughing, rose to the surface, but being luckier than King, he came up at the hole. Finally reaching more solid ice, he dragged himself out. Drenched to the skin, he again took up his search for his pet. But in vain, for not knowing any better, the dog was headed for shore where it would be impossible to break through.

A churning of water at the spot where King was told of his mad efforts. Then—the spot was slowly disappearing—sinking.

The sun had long been set. The air was much colder. Giving vent to his sorrow, Tom sobbed bitterly aloud. No lights shone. Even the moon had been enshrouded by clouds. The wind rose, whining through the trees, like—King.

HEAVENLY

*I'd like to take the sky of blue
And make a cape with that heavenly hue;
To make a cape of sunset pink—
One far lovelier than of mink.*

*I'd trim it with ermine clouds of white
And velvet bows of dark midnight.
I'd add from the sun a clasp of gold
To make it just a little bold.*

STAR-CUT DAWN

*Glitter in your icy sheaths
Way up in the sky,
O're the hills and knoles and heaths
'Till the dawn is nigh.*

Come piercing through the night,
Widening—till the gloom is gone,
Gone . . . with dawn's first light.*

ROBERT BERGEVIN

GOOD OLD CLOUD FACE

Penny, sitting in a white leather upholstered chair, tapped her foot unconsciously. She sat gracefully, staring at nothing in particular, a dreamy look in her grey eyes. Her rebellious black, wavy hair contrasted like ebony against the white leather. Her neck rose from ruffles of blue that were the collar of her dress, the creamy white of her skin and the soft blue of the dress blending lovingly, like the blue and white of summer skies.

To this, as well as the admiring glances of the passing privates, Penny was oblivious. She sat in the gracious waiting room of the Armory, headquarters of the National Guards, 100th Infantry.

A group of privates wandered aimlessly in. They stopped short, staring at Penny as if at a vision. She glanced up, returning their stares frankly, her eyes resting on each one in turn. Suddenly she smiled, a tiny, friendly smile. They smiled back and sat down in various chairs, none of them, however, very far from Penny. Silence prevailed. Each one was obviously trying to think of a way to start a conversation.

Then Don, officially Private Taine, turned to Penny.

"Say, I hope you aren't waiting for one of the privates. This place is usually overrun with girls, and Old Cloud Face raises —, well, any way, he doesn't like it." He finished rather lamely.

Penny looked puzzled. "Cloud Face?"

"That's our pet name for Captain McAins." This from Private Young.

Private Loaton leaned forward in his chair, intent on the conversation. "Do you know what he did last night? We were getting ready for marching review and we didn't notice the Captain come in. It was late anyway and we were in a hurry. Well, we didn't salute and what do you think happens? We get a penalty of an hour's duty every night for a week! How do you like the guy? First he tells us to wear our dress uniforms, and to get ready in a hurry. Then he tells us that we don't hurry enough and we should concentrate on dressing and nothing else. So we concentrate, and look what happens."

Taine groaned, "I had a date for a dance on Thursday night, too. If I have to be on duty from nine to ten and it's ten thirty by the time I get out of here, and I have to go home and get ready for the dance before I call for Connie, do you think she'll wait?"

The question was directed to Penny. She tried to hide the smile on her face and looked up at the somber Private Taine.

"What time are you supposed to call for her?" Her eyes twinkled with a humorous secret.

Taine shook his head sadly. "Nine o'clock."

The men voiced their opinions at once. "Who do you think you are, Romeo or Robert Taylor?"

"Yes, do you expect her to play 'statues' while you run errands for Cloud Face?"

One of the men pranced gayly over to Taine, an idiotic smile on his face. "Oh, Mr. Gable, sign my autograph book, pal—— eese?" He offered the imaginary book, his voice high and simpering, the sentence ending in a giggle.

Taine gave him a playful push, sending him sprawling on the floor.

Someone near the door whispered fiercely, "Quiet, you muggs. Here comes Baby Face Nelson."

The men stood up hurriedly and snapped to attention, saluting smartly as a dignified man with steel grey eyes entered. He looked questioningly at them. Penny ran to him, taking his arm in a firm grasp. "Dad, I've waited so long for you. Mom sent me and she said to tell you —." Her voice trailed off as she led the captain across the room.

The silence in the waiting room was so thick you could have cut it with a knife. The privates had frozen at attention, fears and disgust in their eyes. They sank slowly into chairs.

"Out of all the girls that come here, we pick the captain's daughter to tell what we think of him. Shall we shoot ourselves alphabetically or just quietly jump off a bridge?"

Loaton spoke with a falsely bright smile on his face. "Do you think he'll have us court martialed?"

The men groaned. "Quiet, cheerful," someone ejaculated.

Just then the Captain appeared at the door. They leaped up to salute. The Captain advanced with long strides. "At ease, men." His voice rumbled deep in his throat. The Privates quaked inwardly; their doom had come.

With his hands on his hips, the Captain stood before them. "My daughter told me of her conversation with you."

Loaton looked at Taine, flames of anger leaping in his eyes. You just couldn't trust a woman.

The Captain continued. "She told me of the spirit in which you accepted your punishment."

The men stirred with apprehension. A twinkle came into the Captain's eyes. They looked like Penny's eyes when he smiled. His voice boomed in the quiet room. "And men, I want to tell you how proud I am that you can take a penalty without malice. You are excused from further evening duty for the week."

With this he strode from the room, leaving the men dumbfounded. Private Young recovered first. "Fellows, did you hear what I heard?" The dazed men shook their heads. Loaton stood with his arms folded, an expression of ponderous wonder on his face. "Well, how do you like the guy?"

My Girl's Little Brother

I am a mild-mannered person usually; in fact, timid little squirrels stand in my path just to see me walk around them. I'm the type of fellow who gives candy to babies and nickels to pan-handlers. All things considered, you'd hardly think me capable of conceiving such a fiendish plan as the murder of a small boy. But such are my thoughts concerning little "Slug," the girl friend's brother. Just to prove to you what a blight such a boy is on the life of a poor young dope, listen to this tale of woe. I would suggest that at this point you take time out to secure a large supply of handkerchiefs.

I walk cheerfully up the walk whistling the "Triumphal March" from "Aida" and knock happily on the door. Little "Slug" answers the door. I am no longer happy. He yells, "Hi ya, Slug," and kicks me in the stomach. I ignore this, however, for my stomach muscles are hardened to it. He further enlightens me by telling me that his sister isn't ready. I sit down for my usual three-hour wait and am obliged to listen to the "Lone Ranger,"—little Slug's favorite program. An exciting moment comes; Tonto is going to scalp heap big villain. Little Slug whips out a large knife and reenacts the scene on me. I am lucky. He cuts off only my tie and misses my hair. I think that that wasn't a very nice tie, anyway.

The program ends and our hero begins to demonstrate to me the fight between Slugger McNutt and Horizontal Shor. Strangely enough I am given the part of the punching bag. The only really bad result is a bloody nose. I have a package of gum. I offer him a piece. I no longer have any gum. I resign myself to this and think of people in the same situation as I, such as a man having a tooth pulled. I decide I'd rather be the man having his tooth pulled.

Suddenly Matilda appears all ready to go. When I recover from the faint caused by this, I find little Slug tearing up my theater tickets. As I have only enough money for carfare, one could easily see that this little incident would make me extremely unhappy. I decide to retreat as quickly as possible and leave via the nearest exit, pushing Matilda ahead of me. I have not escaped completely, however, for as I go out the door little Slug kicks me in the leg. As I limp away from the house, I think lovely thoughts about boiling in oil, burning at the stake, beheading and any other delightful ways to get rid of little Slug.

No, my bored readers, if you can't forgive me for murder, at least give me only life imprisonment because if I am killed I'll be kicked by little Slug while I am shoveling brimstones.

As I talk to Matilda, I find out that little Slug is going skating. Maybe there would be an accident. The ice might break. He might fall and break his neck. I can hope, can't I?

MAX BELLIS

This "Gentle" Art of Growing Up

I never courted trouble; it just crept up on me while I least expected it. I was having the time of my life, when out of a clear sky came "Isn't it about time you acted your age?"

That set me thinking: I was nearly teen-age and here I was, still acting like those male rogues who were my playmates. I had practically ruined my physical appearance—stringy, sun-baked hair, perpetually dirty hands and knees that were continuously mud streaked and bruised. (I still have some scars). Poor Mom, her biggest problem was my clothes; but as for me, I decided they interfered too much with climbing trees.

Well, from that time on, oh merciful heaven, life was a problem—a problem that had to be solved in the way that put least wear and tear on my family. Since I was not destined to go to bed one night a hopeful maiden and awaken the next morning a self-confident Boston debutante, I decided to copy the characteristics which I most admired in my heroines. In rapid succession I acquired a flute-like voice, a bell-like laugh, a blues singer's moan, much to the wide-eyed wonder of my schoolmates.

But, oh, my farmer-like walk did not match my wonderful vocal achievements and so after some persuasion—private methods of my own making—I added to my wardrobe a pair of slippers, not vulgar shoes, which gained for me the added height of two inches. Growing pains bothered me, but I did not let them interfere with my contortion acting as a slinking siren, or a hopping sparrow.

Now I felt that I was getting somewhere; a satisfied smirk settled over my innocent cosmetic-smeared countenance. But something was wrong, or else why did Mom and Dad smile at each other when they thought my slightly stooped shoulders were turned from them? After much earnest study in front of a mirror—the family peeking around various doorways and pieces of furniture—I decided my hair needed a change. And so after a most thorough shampoo I embarked upon the adventure of creating for myself a suitable coiffure. I have no doubt that visitors often left soon after I arrived from school because of the sweetish, sickening odor that wafted through to the living room. It was, of course, singed hair, for in my efforts to conquer ragged ends I often let the curling iron heat to the temperature of boiling water.

All this has covered a period of several years—I have given up hope. Methinks I have labored too long as it is. Fate take your course! Now at a stage of complete exhaustion, I have never really changed. Learning to ice skate, swim, dance, ski, play basketball, and swing a tennis racquet have only worked off my excess energy. But put me into a pair of slacks, a sweat shirt, an old hat, and give me a fishing rod and a can a worms and my Miss Hyde skin falls at my feet. Then I don't need torturous shoes, curly hair, pretty clothes or war paint. I create my own personality—a personality that age and time cannot take from me, for it is a perpetual youth.

KATHLEEN FREUND

Dreams

I sit in my darkened room alone watching the dying firelight flicker and flare on the hearth and make dark shadows that dance and play on the warm stones like so many elves that entice one away to a land of dreams. And as my mind travels into a realm of fancy, I ponder the question of what dreams are.

Dreams are the fountains of youth in whose mirrored depths time vanishes. He who dreams is young, whether his hair be golden or gray; whether his life is just begun or his life is nigh well done. Shall we point to one and say that he is a dreamer and condemn him for that? No! We are all dreamers! No matter how matter of fact we may be, no matter how unemotional, no matter how economical, we have all dreamed and are dreamers. Who has not speculated on wealth, love, home, marriage, the future? We all have, and therefore we have dreamed. No mind is so dull, no eye so blind that it cannot find pabulum for dreams.

Each little episode is full could we but perceive it. Every action has its effect on the soul. Everything has its tears and smiles. The world is full of material, and every suggesting thought is making us what we are and what we shall be. Yes, dreams are realities which play a subtle part in our lives. We may not be masters of our destiny; we may not be masters of the universe; but we are masters of dreams, and dreams are our lives.

HOW DEAR TO ME

*How dear are all these things to me
That God has placed upon this earth
To fill my heart and soul with joy
And never-ending, happy mirth.*

*This autumn time, the colored leaves
That dance and jump and frisk and play;
The soothing heat of summer rain,
The loveliness of summer's day.*

*The quiet of a tropic night,
A mellow moon, a starlit sky;
The echo of a song-bird's cry,
The melody of winds that sigh.*

*They go unnumbered, all these things,
And yet a few I've tucked away
That can't express themselves in words,
So I'll just say
How dear are all these things to me.*

Umbra Caesaris et Grover Whelan

Umbra Caesaris non erat laeta. Fecerat multas disturbanceones apud inferos. Igitur, ut aleret pacem, Midas declaravit eum posse ire ad "Expositionem Orbis Terrae." Caesar erat tam cupidus ut potitus sit nova toga. Cum Caesar pervenisset, G. Whelan concurrat ei in subvia et prosecutus est eum per campos. Ambulaverunt tacite tempus breve. Deinde G. Whelan dixit:

"Estone hoc mirum? Vidistine meliores vias?"

"Est eximium, verum," Caesar respondit, "sed non potest comparare cum Appia Via."

"Fortasse, Caesar, sed potesne negare statuas nostras esse optimas."

"Visitavistine Romam, G. Whelan? Vidistine 'Venus de Milo'?"

Admiraris aliquid hic?" G. Whelan dixit aegre.

"Certe," Caesar respondit. "Quis est ille odor qui pervadit aerem."

"Ille? Ille est solum igneus canis."

"Quod genus canis est calidum?"

"Est non canis. Est cibus!"

"Ille, verum, est mirus. Est mirior quam aliquid Romae."

Donnerte: "Es war die Tiefe,
Die hat ihn eingefahren."

La Leçon

Marie Lejeune était la mère d'une grande famille. Pendant la récolte elle aidait souvent son mari toute la matinée, et quand elle retournait à la maison pour préparer le dîner, le bûcher était toujours vide. Fatiguée, elle était obligée de couper du bois et de faire du feu avant de pouvoir préparer le dîner.

Un soir Jacques Lejeune a dit à sa femme qu'il aurait le lendemain six hommes qui allaient l'aider à construire une grange. Tout de suite Marie a pensé à tout ce qu'ils mangeraient et elle a dit à son mari qu'elle aurait besoin de bois pour faire cuire le dîner.

Le lendemain matin madame Lejeune est allée voir s'il y avait du bois dans le bûcher, mais pas un seul morceau! Marie voulait donner une leçon à son mari. Elle a préparé le dîner et sans le faire cuire, l'a mis sur la table.

A midi les hommes sont entrés. Quand ils ont vu la table ils ne savaient que faire. Devraient-ils s'asseoir ou non? Marie a expliqué qu'elle ne pouvait pas faire cuire sans bois pour faire du feu. Elle a donné aux hommes du lait et des gâteaux. Après en avoir mangé, les hommes sont allés au bûcher où ils ont coupé du bois. Dix minutes plus tard Marie avait plus de bois qu'elle n'avait eu tout l'été et Monsieur avait appris une bonne leçon.

AMERICA

Though the waters of Venice are theirs to keep,
And the hills of Switzerland very steep,
Still I'll stay at home where I can speak:
It's America for me.

They may have their English fog at night
And their fancy streets with all their lights,
For we've New York to keep us bright:
It's America for me.

Though they've legions of soldiers with warlike attire,
Still we have our movies stars to admire,
And do they fill all your desires?
It's America for me.

When you pick up your newspaper, you may say,
"Well, look, we have nice weather heading this way."
But when they pick up their papers, here's what they say,
"Look, we have Germany heading this way."

It's yours, good people; yours to keep—
This land all love and long to seek.
It's yours to use in your own free way,
And save it from these stormy days.

A LAMP STUDENTS WILL APPRECIATE

Many homes do not have the excellent lighting which is often found in our schools and colleges. Students find out the difference when home-work has to be done.

If your home needs better lighting for study work, you will find the I. E. S. lamp just the "ticket."

After School . . .

Your life in business will bring hundreds of daily needs which a great store can fill. Rochesterians have the advantage of one of the great stores of America right in their midst—a store that can render every service from a "date book" for customers' messages to a complete house-full of furniture.

Sibley, Lindsay &
Curr Company

AT SCRANTOM'S

You will find supplies and equipment, social stationery and engraving, games, stamp collectors' supplies, and one of the country's great book stores.
